Na-val Re-views (nā vel ri vyōōs) n. 1. held since 1893; created to observe historic anniversaries

When ships of the U. S. Atlantic Fleet sail from their respective homeports to take part in the July 4, 2000, International Naval Review (INR) in New York Harbor, they will pass through waters marked by five previous such events, where ships of friendly nations joined with those of the U.S. in observing historic anniversaries.

In 1893, ships of 10 nations rendezvoused in Hampton Roads, Virginia and proceeded to New York Harbor in conjunction with the Columbian Exposition, marking the 400th anniversary of Columbus' landing.

This gala affair involved participation by warships from Argentina, Brazil, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Russia, Spain and the United Kingdom. U.S. President Grover Cleveland, on board the cruiser USS Dolphin, reviewed the assembled ships on April 26. The following week he officially opened the Exposition in Chicago, Illinois.

On July 4, 1976, New York Harbor was the site for the fourth INR held in the U.S. It was one of the greatest gatherings of navies in history and a fitting Bicentennial tribute to America's maritime heritage. Ships and delegations from more than 40 countries assembled, along with approximately 200 sailing ships of the privately sponsored Operation Sail. U. S. Marines also participated in the observance, rendering honors and providing a military band for activities aboard ship and ashore. Altogether, these ships and units reflected the hope of humankind for peace and the reality of cooperation among the peoples of many lands.

The ships of the INR were reviewed by President Gerald R. Ford, embarked on board the guided missile cruiser USS Wainwright, which steamed down the Hudson River from the George Washington Bridge to the aircraft carrier USS Forrestal at her anchorage near the Statue of Liberty.

Lady Liberty herself was the focus for the next INR, held in 1986. This fifth gathering brought together ships from 13 countries. U.S. President Ronald Reagan reviewed the 21 foreign and 12 U.S. Navy ships from the battleship USS Iowa. One of the highlights of Liberty Weekend was the relighting of the statue's torch which symbolized the diversity of cultures that make up this country and recognizing the ocean travel that brought millions of immigrants to America.

In 1907, Hampton Roads was the site of the second INR, held in conjunction with the Jamestown Exposition in observance of the founding of Jamestown, Virginia. In addition to most of the warships of the U.S. Atlantic Fleet, ships representing Argentina, Austria-Hungary, Brazil, Chile, Germany and the United Kingdom participated in the event. President Theodore Roosevelt reviewed the ships from the yacht, USS Mayflower. The date of the review was again April 26.

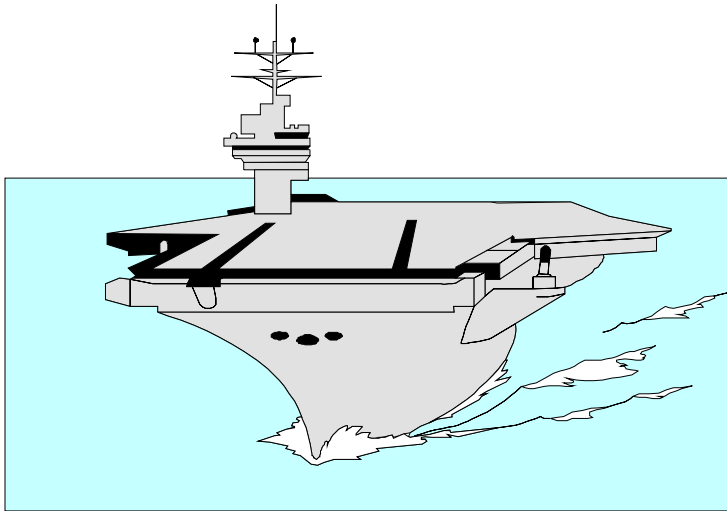

Those who witnessed this review were treated to the latest in U. S. Navy shipboard firepower, including the double-turreted USS monitor, whose rifled guns with greatly increased capability were contrasted with the old-fashioned, smooth-bore guns of the ironclad first developed during the American Civil War.

In 1957, Hampton Roads was again host to the third INR, also held as an anniversary observance of the founding of Jamestown. Invitations were extended by the U. S. State Department to the nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and to those countries considered to have a special interest in the founding of Jamestown and the colonization of North America. Approximately 80 U. S. warships were joined by 30 combatants representing 17 countries including Belgium, Canada, Columbia, Cuba, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, France, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Peru, Portugal, Spain, Turkey, United Kingdom, Uruguay and Venezuela. On June 12, Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson reviewed the double line of ships from the guided missile cruiser USS Canberra.

Among the U. S. representatives assembled for this review were ships with the ultimate in weaponry and fighting systems of that decade: USS Saratoga, the newest large attack aircraft carrier; USS Boston and USS Canberra, the first two guided missile cruisers; and USS Barb, the latest nuclear-powered submarine.
